July 6, 2022, Wilmington, DE – Jewish Federation of Delaware landed a Third-Place winning entry in the 2022 National Communications Contest sponsored by the National Federation of Press Women for its monthly publication.

The annual contest is two-tiered. The first tier of the contest is the statewide competition sponsored by the Delaware Press Association (DPA). The second tier is the national competition, run by the National Federation of Press Women (NFPW).

A distinguished group of professional journalists, communications specialists and educators judged nearly 2,000 entries in a wide variety of categories. Only first-place winning entries at the state level are eligible to enter the national contest. All entries were published or broadcast between January-December 2021.

“We are honored to receive national recognition for our communications efforts that strike an emotional chord with our valued supporters,” stated Jewish Federation of Delaware President & CEO, Seth J. Katzen. “Our monthly publication informs and inspires our community with a Jewish lens, serving as a constant reminder how We Grow Stronger TOGETHER.”
